

Passion and taboos in work with young people (workshop)

Suzana Krstić

“I don’t like young people!! They are stupid! They just want to have fun and drink! Of course, I’m working with them all the time. Why not?!”

“I think it is ok to ignore gay participant during the training because I have no idea what to do with him. For me, that is not normal, even I am pretending that is normal, because of colleagues.”

“I agree that we should give equal rights to everybody. I respect everybody; I just have no skills to work with people in wheelchairs or deaf people. “

“My work is my passion. I am in burnout all the time, but it worth.”

“You know that feeling when your whole body is present, you just know that you are on the right place and you believe in everything you do? Everybody could feel how passionate I am; probably that is the reason participants like me.”

“I love money. Is it passion? Or taboo?”

If you want to think deeply about your passions and taboos and you are ready to speak about it, come with us! And please, bring all your passions and taboos ☺!!!

Suzana Krstić is psychologist, psychotherapist, trainer and manager in “Hajde da...” Group. She is working in the field of non-formal education since 1997. She is working with young people, mostly. At this moment, she is trying to combine all her knowledge, experience and competences to create space for participants who will live their passions and learn how to live with their taboos.